The Education Council is the central force in the graphic arts industry to which the responsibility of developing a broad educational system has been assigned. Its long range objective is to see that there is provided an adequate pool of well-trained manpower for all aspects of the graphic arts industry. Its objectives also include the development of the broad cultural and promotional aspects of graphic arts education in public and private schools, an activity that will enhance the future strength of the industry.

Membership in the Council, on an active basis, is open to all graphic arts organizations, groups, educational institutions and societies, companies and individuals who are in any way interested in the upbuilding and preservation of the arts, sciences, and craft skills that implement the graphic arts industry.

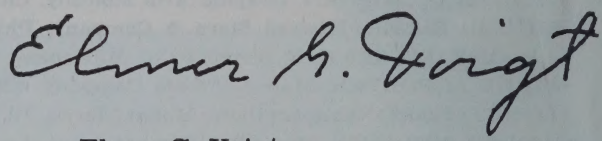
FOREWORD

The research connected with the preparation of this report listing graphic arts industry scholarships in institutions of higher learning was compiled as part of the Education Council's project to prepare a text for use by vocational guidance counselors in counselling young people concerning the vocational opportunities of the graphic arts industry. The scholarship information is being released at this time because of numerous requests from educators, guidance counselors and printers for this information. It will be included in the guidance text when published.

The number and variety of scholarships provided by the commercial printing industry reveals, as probably no other study could, the interest in and support of higher education by the graphic arts industry. The publication of this list brings to the attention of all concerned, for the first time, the types of scholarships offered by the graphic arts industry in all sections of the country and the number of institutions of higher learning participating in this program.

The Education Council of the Graphic Arts Industry, upon request, will be glad to provide advice and guidance to any printers or schools desiring to establish a graphic arts industry scholarship program.



Elmer G. Voigt
President
Education Council of the Graphic Arts Industry Inc.

THE EDUCATION COUNCIL
Of The
GRAPHIC ARTS INDUSTRY, INC.

A Statement of Organization, Purpose, and Aims

The Education Council of the Graphic Arts Industry was organized in 1950 by a number of leading printers and major national printing trade groups. The Council includes in its memship today 21 national and local printing trade groups as well as over 100 individual printing companies, educational and training institutions and leading educators. The International Graphic Arts Education Association is an integral part of the Education Council.

The Education Council was organized to:

- coordinate activities in connection with education and training for the graphic arts, with due consideration for all processes therein;
- render educational advisory services in the graphic arts;
- cooperate in activities which bring about a broader understanding of the printing and publishing industries;
- cooperate in the establishment of national graphic arts education policies;

3 0112 105252743

- serve as a reference authority on value of educational and training materials;
- aid and encourage the development, improvement, and support of programs and projects in graphic arts education;
- make contributions toward the attainment of its objectives and in furtherance of its purposes.

The Education Council is now an integral part of the graphic arts industry and is the recognized coordinating organization in the field of graphic arts education and training. Projects already completed include publication of:

Safety Manual for the Graphic Arts Industry

(A complete and authoritative text on safety measures and safety programs for printing plants published jointly with the National Safety Council.)

The Printing Industry Offers You a Career

(A beautifully illustrated, two-color brochure concerning the vocational opportunities in the graphic arts industry.)

A Survey of Graphic Arts Education in Schools and Colleges of the United States.

(Contains statisical tables, summary report, and directory of over 1600 printing teachers and 1100 schools teaching printing.)

Included in the project which are now under development are:

- Assistance to Local Associations in conducting man-power surveys.
- Suggestions for complete recruitment and selection programs. (This program includes the development of a recruitment film which will be of use by local associations and individual companies.)
- The development of a manual for use of vocational guidance counselors relating sepcifically to the graphic arts industry.
- The development of an Industrial Arts publication for use in public schools throughout the nation.
- The Printing Industry Manual for use in Industry Orientation Training programs.
- The development of a kit of materials and recommended procedures for the establishment and operation of local industry education advisory committees which are intended to be the foundation stone for a broad graphic arts education system.
- The preparation of a Manual on Presswork Procedures.
- Conducting a survey of all educational programs in graphic arts for the purpose of recommending coordination.
